

Galway Girls' Bio

The Galway Girls are a multi-instrumental Celtic trio with a mission to keep Irish traditions alive. They sing and play memorable arrangements of everything from traditional Irish folk songs to modern hits from U2 and The Cranberries. Whether performing at a concert, a wedding, a funeral, or a pub, they create a warm, welcoming environment where everyone feels like family. Audiences will come away feeling enriched, inspired, and a little more connected to their Irish heritage. After all, everyone's a little Irish.

Janice Landry is a 7 on the Enneagram, which means (among other things) that she can never learn enough instruments. She studied music and drama at Catholic University (in Washington, DC). She toured Japan with Disney on Classic and the Tokyo Philharmonic Orchestra, singing the roles of Anna (Frozen), Nala (The Lion King), and Rapunzel (Tangled). Based in New York City, Janice has performed in many new musicals Off-Broadway and regionally. Some of her favorite credits as an actor/musician include The Irish... And How They Got That Way, and Woody Guthrie's American Song. Janice is also a writer with three full length musicals (Esther, Pilgrim, and City Rising) that have been published and performed all over the world.

Caitlin McKechney started off playing guitar and drum set in her hometown of Chicago, then went on to study musical theater and classical voice at Northwestern University and ended singing opera for the past 10 years. Even while pursuing an opera career, Caitlin maintained her connection to theater with roles such as Lilli Vanessi in Kiss Me Kate, Sarah Brown in Guys and Dolls and The Irish and How They Got That Way. She also started the group, The Opera Cowgirls, which rearranges classical songs with contemporary instrumentation, where she plays guitar and ukulele and serves as it's band leader. AncestryDNA.com says that Caitlin is 78% Irish and her Great-Grandfather was the ambassador to Ireland in the early 1960s.
